Our doors are always open, and we are ready for those who need help.

The first step in getting help is knowing what to do.
Let our medical professionals guide the road to recovery.

We may be living in isolation, but we know addiction does not. There are many factors that affect whether someone will become addicted to drugs or alcohol. Because the effects of substances vary from person to person, treatment should never be one size fits all.

When public health is faced with uncertainty, it is crucial to turn to experts for guidance. Our world-class substance use specialists and industry-leading assessment tools offer the best science-based evaluation possible to pave the way toward treatment and recovery.

These are trying times for all of us, and we are here to help anyone who may be struggling with substance use. Our medical team is prepared to meet in person or via telehealth, so call now to schedule an assessment. We can help figure out what to do, one step at a time.
